

Introduction

Kenya, Tanzania, and Uganda have had a history of cooperation that dates back to the early 20th century. The Customs Union between Kenya and Uganda was formed in 1917, and Tanzania joined in 1927. Burundi and Rwanda joined in 2009, and South Sudan joined in 2016. The EAC has had 3 names since its conception; the East African High Commission from 1948 to 1961, East African Common Services Organization from 1961 to 1967, and then from 1967 to 1977 the East African Community. In 1967 the East African Common Services Organization was superseded by the East African Community, which aimed to strengthen the ties between the members through a common market, a common customs tariff, and a range of public serves to help achieve economic growth in the region. In 1977, the East African Community collapsed due to Kenya requesting more seats in the decision-making organs, disagreements between member countries, and the different economic systems between countries, primarily between Tanzania and Kenya. The East African Community was re-established when its treaty was signed on November 30, 1999, and came into force on July 7, 2000.

Number of member countries: 7

Region(s): Africa

Headquarters: Arusha, Tanzania

Composition: Plurilateral

Coverage: Goods & Services

Signed: November 30, 1999

Entry into force: July 7, 2000

Web Site: <http://www.eac.int>

Member Countries

Burundi	South Sudan
Democratic Republic of the Congo	Tanzania
Kenya	Uganda
Rwanda

History

1917 - Customs union between Kenya and Uganda is formed.

1927 - Tanzania joins the Customs Union.

1948 - EAC is named the East African High Commission.

1961 - The name changes to East African Common Services Organization.

1967 - The East African Common Services Organization is superseded by the East African Community.

1977 - The East African Community collapses due disagreements between member countries.

November 30, 1999 - The East African Community is reestablished when its treaty was signed.

July 7, 2000 - New treaty comes into force.

2009 - Burundi and Rwanda join the EAC.

2016 - South Sudan becomes the sixth member of the East African Community.